

Country Cottage Full of Antiques

The contents of a Somerset cottage, entered into the Charterhouse March 14th & 15th auction, has revealed a lifetime obsession of collecting.

Selected views of some of the cottage's contents.

“The owner, who passed away recently, has clearly never heard of the phrase Minimalism,” commented Richard Bromell. “Having worked in auctioneering for nearly 35 years, this property is one of the fullest I have seen on my travels and although no one particular item is of high value, collectively all the lots will mount up to a substantial sum incredibly quickly. It is a fascinating cottage contents telling the history of the owners collecting obsession.”

There were thousands of pieces of pottery, porcelain, glass, pictures, furniture, silver, jewellery, books, dolls, copper, brass, items of militaria. Every surface, including the walls and kitchen work tops, housed and displayed the owner’s treasures.

In the dining room, which was dimly lit by two low wattage bulbs, there was hardly anywhere to stand let alone sit. Throughout the cottage there were numerous display cabinets, most of which had the contents double stacked in them as the owner acquired more and more items with no flat surfaces to display the items on the pieces simply piled up and up.

Charterhouse, who were instructed by the executors to clear the property, spent days wrapping, packing and removing items dating from the 18th to 20th centuries to their Sherborne salerooms. The items were then sorted, entered into the appropriate specialist sales and catalogued. In addition, many items received a good dusting as they had not seen a cloth and polish for many years.
