

Silver Service

The Charterhouse two day November auction on 16th and 17th includes an early Victorian silver tea set.

“The market for silver remains strong” commented Richard Bromell. “You then combine this with small, pretty and desirable pieces and this produces a recipe for auction success.”

England has been a nation of tea drinkers for centuries. With the 21st century fashion for taking afternoon tea with sandwiches, cakes and scones, the silver tea set at Charterhouse, although needing a good polish, will grace any table whether in a cottage or a country house.

The Victorian silver tea service

The set was made in London 1846 and is of compressed octagonal form. Engraved with flowers, foliage and strap work it also had the advantage of not being inscribed with a presentation inscription and is estimated at £400 - £600* *plus 25.2% buyers premium (inc VAT)
